Abraham Ganges

It is unusual to find contemporaneous accounts of the First Ganges that bring their lives out of the shadows. An exception is found in Robert Sutcliffe's Travels in some parts of North America, in the years 1804, 1805, & 1806. Sutcliffe, an English Quaker, spent considerable time at the turn of the 19th century, including visit to Quaker meetings throughout the country, including an extended stay in Chester County in February, 1806. This entry, dated the 2d Month [February], 23rd, almost certainly describes Abraham Ganges. The circumstances of his capture match those of the Ganges and while he isn't named directly, he would have been about 15 in 1806 and his master's initials, "P.P." match only one of the Ganges' masters residing in Chester County, Philip Price Jr..

This night I lodged at P. P.'s. Here also I met with a smart little Negro boy, who had been stolen from his parents in Africa, and was placed in this family by the Abolition Society. He had the character of being a boy of a bright capacity; and although not very communicative to his master and mistress, he was open and free with the children of the family, and would often, by the fireside in the winter evenings, recite to them the mournful story of his being made captive; with many shocking circumstances that attended his transportation in the slave ship; from which he was liberated by an American ship of war.
